FOLLOW THE TRAIL TO BRIDGE.

Whole Countryside Assisting in Trying to Find Some Clue as to Where the Midnight Walk Led the Woman. Drowning Suspected.

Every effort has been made today to locate either Mrs. Brown Colley or her body. Some contend that the woman is alive and wandering through the hills or that she has fallen in a collapse somewhere in the woods while the majority hold to the belief that she either fell or was knocked from the B & O bridge at Green Junction.

Officer Michael McCudden yesterday afternoon dynamited the river near the bridge, but he says that dynamite was not strong enough to be effective. Altogether thirty-four sticks of dynamite were discharged but they scarcely made a ripple on the waters. This morning two bloodhounds were brought from Fairmont, W. Va., and have been trailing all morning. When over the trail is caught up the dogs lead to the center of the bridge. They were started on the trail this morning at the Colley residence in Dunbar and trailed the woman to the bridge. A very puzzling occurrence took place at the camp of Italians. The dogs spent upwards of twenty minutes sniffing the ground and running in and under the cars. It seemed apparent that the woman had tread back and forth about this particular spot many times and the dogs were rather undecided as to the proper trail, but they finally circled about and took up the trail again to the center of the bridge.

They were taken across the bridge but could not catch up a trail on the opposite side of the river. The man in charge of the dogs gave it as his opinion that the woman had never crossed the bridge. The dogs were taken up both sides of the river banks but could not get a trace of the woman, then they were taken over the hills and up to Roethelick, but without any success in catching up a trail.

A number of responsible persons reported to Dr. Colley that they had seen a skirt tied about her going towards Solson Park at 6 o'clock yesterday morning. These clues are being investigated today and the dogs are being taken all over the territory at South Connellsville in the hope that if the woman has crossed the bridge the dogs may be able to find her in the woods. Engines that crossed the bridge between 3 and 6 o'clock on the morning of the disappearance of the woman have been examined, but there is no trace of them having struck anything.

It was rumored this morning that the long coat found yesterday in the Yough river did not belong to Mrs. Colley. This was denied by the family, every member of which identified the cloak.

DISCUSS RESURVEY OF YOUGH RIVER.

Public Meeting to Arouse Interest and Prepare Evidence at Chamber of Commerce Next Week.

At last week's session of the Chamber of Commerce it was decided to hold an open meeting in the near future for the purpose of preparing for the presentation of evidence on the occasion of the resurvey of the Yough river. After consultation the date has been fixed for the night of next week's regular meeting of the Chamber, Thursday, June 25. Light refreshments will be served and the meeting will partake of the nature of a social session. Congressman A. F. Cooper and others from Uniontown will be present.

It is hoped that all of our citizens will bear the date in mind and endeavor to attend this meeting. Said Secretary Armstrong this morning: "The will soon be up to us to engage in the work of showing to the government engineers the reasons that exist for urging the improvement and all of our people should be thoroughly informed on the subject. Meetings such as this are the best means of diffusing this information."

ANTI-INJUNCTION PLANK INSERTED IN REPUBLICAN PLATFORM AFTER FIGHT.

Sweltering Weather Greets Delegates Who Are Preparing For Nominations--Feeling of Unrest Is Clearly Apparent on Floor of Convention

CONVENTION HALL, CHICAGO, June 17.—Special.—The convention was called to order at 10:17 o'clock this morning. Mr. Hopkins (chairman of the resolutions committee) reported the draft of the platform.

With the temperature soaring in the eighties, Chairman Hopkins declined to make any concession to the heat and ascended the stage wearing his usual pearl waist tie and high stiff collar.

The hall murmured as he took the opportunity to put out several thousand fans bearing the red stained countenance of their candidate.

PLATFORM ADOPTED;
NOMINATIONS ARE ON.

The platform proposed by the majority at 12:45 o'clock was adopted. The convention then went into its nominating session.

Representative H. G. Boutwell placed the name of Joseph G. Cannon before the convention. This was followed by Representative Theodore B. Burton who placed the name of William H. Taft before the convention.

During the discussion of the platform one from President Roosevelt was read by Frank K. Hoge of Minnesota, saying that he hoped only that the anti-injunction plank would be adopted and added, he said, "I stand for the anti-injunction plank and in accordance with the committee's belief in the trade union I hope very much that this plank will go into the platform."

The vote by which it was adopted was 55 to 11. So important did the committee consider this feature of the proposed platform that it adopted the unusual course of authorizing the plank's publication immediately in stand of waiting until the full set of resolutions should be presented to the convention.

ADMINISTRATION IS AFTER CANNON.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—What is said to be on between the administration and Cannon is being fought in the public platform and is exposing the program of the latter in a way that has aroused their wrath. President is stirred up over it and from this time forth the White House black will be on the speaker.

It will not be surprising if the developments at Chicago in the last few days will result in a determined fight by the Taft-Roosevelt forces to elect another man as speaker of the next Congress.

After it was said in reliable quarters that the word had gone out to get the stream of Cannon and show him no quarter.

EULOGIZES PRESIDENT IN ELOQUENT ADDRESS.

CHICAGO, June 18.—The most eloquent phrase of the session thus far was delivered by H. G. Burton of New York. Just after Senator Lodge called the convention to order, Mr. Burton rose and in a grandiloquent address eulogized the president.

He said that the president's policy was the highest that this country has ever known and that it was the duty of every citizen to support it.

CONVENTION PROGRAM
The convention will be held in the Convention Hall, Chicago, from June 17 to June 20. The program for the evening of June 17 is as follows: 7:30 o'clock, dinner; 8:00 o'clock, session; 10:00 o'clock, adjournment.

and imagination and leadership. For his patriotism and his love for his country, he is a man who is not only a leader but a follower.

When Senator Hopkins of Illinois called for the reading of the draft of the platform, the convention was divided into two camps. One camp was for the adoption of the platform as it stood, and the other camp was for the insertion of the anti-injunction plank.

The anti-injunction plank was a subject of much discussion. It was a plank that had been inserted in the platform of the Republican party in 1896, and it was a plank that had been dropped in 1904.

The reading of the minority report was concluded at 11:10 o'clock. A. H. Burdette of the Court of Appeals was elected a National Committeeman, succeeding John W. Yerkes.

The minority report protested against certain sections of the platform as framed by the committee, and offered suggestions.

Chicago, June 18.—United States Senator J. B. Foraker of Ohio will be placed in nomination for president by C. B. McCoy of Cohecton, O., and the nomination will be seconded by W. O. Emery of Macon Ga. The Foraker manager declined to give any estimate as to the number of votes it was expected Senator Foraker would receive but contented himself with the statement that he would receive the support of "a good number of delegates."

An agreement has been reached by representatives of all the candidates by which the nominating and seconding speeches for president will be mutually curtailed. This agreement is that only one nominating and one

THEODORE E. BURTON, seconding speech shall be made for each candidate and that the long list of seconding speeches which have been heretofore announced will be read by the secretary. The secretary Taft will be by Theodore E. Burton of Cleveland placing the secretary in nomination and George A. Knight of California seconding the nomination. The speakers who have taken the podium in seconding the nomination are Senator Charles McNary of Iowa, Burkett of Nebraska, Borah of Idaho, George H. Williams of Oregon who was attorney general in the Grant cabinet and Henry Lincoln Johnson the negro orator of Georgia. A similar list of seconding speakers of the other candidates. This determination was reached because the proceedings were promising to be greatly prolonged.

THE PORT OF MISSING MEN

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON,
Author of "The House of a Thousand Candles"

COPYRIGHT, 1907, BY THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

It was unusually cold for the season, and a fine drizzle filled the air. Chauvenet struck off at once away from the lake, turned into the Boulevard Helvetique, thence into the Boulevard Protaisart with its colony of pensions. He walked rapidly until he reached a house that was distinguished from its immediate neighbors only by its unlighted upper windows. He pulled the bell in the wall, and the door was at once opened and instantly closed.

He packed his room.

Armitage, following at twenty yards on the opposite side of the street, passed abruptly at the sudden ending of his chase. It was not an hour for letting, for the Geneva gendarmes have rather good eyes, but Armitage had by no means satisfied his curiosity as to the nature of Chauvenet's errand. He walked on to make sure he was unobserved, crossed the street and again passed the dark, silent house which Chauvenet had entered. He noted the place carefully. It gave no outward appearance of being occupied. He assumed from the general plan of the neighboring buildings that there was a courtyard at the rear of the darkened house, accessible through a narrow passageway at the side. As he studied the situation he kept moving to avoid observation and presently, at a moment when he was quite alone in the street, walked rapidly to the house Chauvenet had entered. Gentlemen in search of adventures do well to avoid the continental wall. Mr. Armitage brushed the glass from the top with his hat. It flung itself within under cover of the rain drip. The plaster had crumbled from the bricks in spots, giving a foot for opportunity, and Mr. Armitage drew himself to the top and dropped within. The front door and windows stared at him blankly, and he committed his fortunes to the bricked passageway. The rain was now coming down in earnest, and at the rear of the house water had begun to drip noisily into an iron spout. The electric lights from neighboring streets made a kind of twilight even in the darkened court, and Armitage threaded his way among a network of clotheslines to the rear wall and viewed the premises. He knew his Geneva from many previous visits. The quarter was undeniably respectable, and there is, to be sure, no reason why the blinds of a house should not be carefully drawn at nightfall at the pleasure of the occupants. The whole lower floor seemed utterly deserted. Only at one point on the third floor was there any sign of light, and this the nearest.

The increasing fall of rain did not encourage loitering in the wet courtyard, where the down-spout now rattled dolorously, and Armitage crossed the court and further assured himself that the lower floor was dark and silent. Balconies were bracketed against the wall at the second and third stories, and the slight iron ladder leading thither terminated a foot above his head. John Armitage was aware that his position, if discovered, was, to say the least, untenable, but he was secure from observation by police, and he assumed that the occupants of the house were probably too deeply engrossed with their affairs to waste much time on what might happen without. Armitage sprang up and caught the lowest round of the ladder, and in a moment his tail figure was a dark blur against the wall as he crept warily upward. The rear rooms of the second story were as dark and quiet as those below. Armitage continued to the third story, where a drop as well as several windows gave upon the balcony, and he found that it was from a broken corner of the door that a sharp blade of light cut the dark. All continued quiet below. He heard the traffic of the neighboring thoroughfares quite distinctly, and from a kitchen near by came the rough clatter of dishwashing to the accompaniment of a quarrel in German between the maids.

He was secure from observation by police.

Two men were talking, and evidently the matter under discussion was of importance, for they spoke with a kind of dogged deliberation, and the long pauses in the dialogue lent color to the belief that some weighty matter was in debate. The beat of the rain on the balcony, and its steady rattle in the spout intervened to dull the sound of voices, but presently one of the speakers, with an impatient exclamation, rose, opened the small glass paneled door a few inches, peered out and returned to his seat, with an exclamation of relief.

"The heights—the heights!" And the young man, whom Chauvenet called Dumard, lifted his thin glass absently. "Yes, the heights," replied Chauvenet, a little dreamily.

"But that declaration—that document! You have never honored me with a glimpse, but you have it put safely away, I dare say."

"There is no point in that one that I dare risk. It is always within easy reach, my dear friend."

"You will do well to destroy that document. It is much better out of the way."

"Your deficiencies in the matter of wisdom are apparent. That paper constitutes my chief asset, my dear associate. So long as we have it we are able to keep dear Francis in order. Therefore we shall hold fast to it, remembering that we risked much in removing it from the lamented Stroebel's archives."

"Do you say 'risked much'? My valued neck, that is all!" said the other. "You and Winkler are without gratitude."

"You will do well," said Chauvenet. "I have work in Vienna for the unknown. If you hear murmurs in Hungary one of these fine days—Nothing has happened for some time, therefore much may happen."

He glanced at his watch. "I have work in Vienna before sailing for New York. Shall we discuss the matter of those Peruvian claims? That is business. These other affairs are more in the nature of delightful diversions, my dear comrade."

"They drew nearer the table, and Dumard produced a box of papers over which he bent with serious attention. Armitage had heard practically all of their dialogue and, what was of equal interest, had been able to study the faces and learn the tones of voice of the two conspirators. He was cramped from his position on the narrow balcony and wet and chilled by the rain, which was now slowly abating. He had learned much that he wished to know and with an ease that astonished him, and he was well content to withdraw with gratitude for his good fortune.

His legs were numb, and he clung close to the railing of the little ladder for support as he crept toward the area. At the second story his foot slipped on the wet wall, smooth from long use, and he stumbled down several steps before he recovered himself. He listened a moment, heard nothing but the tinkle of the rain in the spout, then continued his retreat.

As he stepped upon the brick courtyard he was seized from behind by a pair of strong arms that clasped him tight. In a moment he was thrown across the threshold of a door into an unlighted room, where his captor promptly sat upon him and proceeded to strike a light.

"I am going to America at once," said Chauvenet, holding his filled glass toward a bust of an old type that hung from the ceiling.

"It is probably just as well," said the other. "There's work to do there."

"We must not forget our more legitimate business in the midst of these pleasant side issues."

"That depends on the way you look at it. They seem really to be mourning the old beggar at Vienna. It is the way of a people. They like to be ruled by a savage hand. The people, as you have heard me say before, are fools."

The last speaker was a young man whom Armitage had never seen before. He was a decided blond, with close trimmed, straw-colored beard and slightly curling hair. Opposite him and facing the door, sat Chauvenet. On the table between them were decanters and liqueur glasses.

"I am going to America at once," said Chauvenet, holding his filled glass toward a bust of an old type that hung from the ceiling.

"It is probably just as well," said the other. "There's work to do there."

"We must not forget our more legitimate business in the midst of these pleasant side issues."

from old Stroebel strengthens our hold on Francis, but there is still that question as to Karl and Frederick Augustus. Our dear Francis is not satisfied. He wishes to be quite sure that his dear father and brother are dead. We must reassure him, dear-st Jules."

"Don't be a fool, Dumard. You never seem to understand that the United States of America is a little larger than a barnyard. And I don't believe those fellows are over there. They're probably lying in wait here somewhere ready to take advantage of any opportunity—that is, if they are alive. A man can hardly fall to be impressed with the fact that so few lives stand between him and—"

"The heights—the heights!" And the young man, whom Chauvenet called Dumard, lifted his thin glass absently. "Yes, the heights," replied Chauvenet, a little dreamily.

"But that declaration—that document! You have never honored me with a glimpse, but you have it put safely away, I dare say."

"There is no point in that one that I dare risk. It is always within easy reach, my dear friend."

"You will do well to destroy that document. It is much better out of the way."

"Your deficiencies in the matter of wisdom are apparent. That paper constitutes my chief asset, my dear associate. So long as we have it we are able to keep dear Francis in order. Therefore we shall hold fast to it, remembering that we risked much in removing it from the lamented Stroebel's archives."

"Do you say 'risked much'? My valued neck, that is all!" said the other. "You and Winkler are without gratitude."

"You will do well," said Chauvenet. "I have work in Vienna for the unknown. If you hear murmurs in Hungary one of these fine days—Nothing has happened for some time, therefore much may happen."

He glanced at his watch. "I have work in Vienna before sailing for New York. Shall we discuss the matter of those Peruvian claims? That is business. These other affairs are more in the nature of delightful diversions, my dear comrade."

"They drew nearer the table, and Dumard produced a box of papers over which he bent with serious attention. Armitage had heard practically all of their dialogue and, what was of equal interest, had been able to study the faces and learn the tones of voice of the two conspirators. He was cramped from his position on the narrow balcony and wet and chilled by the rain, which was now slowly abating. He had learned much that he wished to know and with an ease that astonished him, and he was well content to withdraw with gratitude for his good fortune.

His legs were numb, and he clung close to the railing of the little ladder for support as he crept toward the area. At the second story his foot slipped on the wet wall, smooth from long use, and he stumbled down several steps before he recovered himself. He listened a moment, heard nothing but the tinkle of the rain in the spout, then continued his retreat.

As he stepped upon the brick courtyard he was seized from behind by a pair of strong arms that clasped him tight. In a moment he was thrown across the threshold of a door into an unlighted room, where his captor promptly sat upon him and proceeded to strike a light.

"I am going to America at once," said Chauvenet, holding his filled glass toward a bust of an old type that hung from the ceiling.

"It is probably just as well," said the other. "There's work to do there."

"We must not forget our more legitimate business in the midst of these pleasant side issues."

"That depends on the way you look at it. They seem really to be mourning the old beggar at Vienna. It is the way of a people. They like to be ruled by a savage hand. The people, as you have heard me say before, are fools."

The last speaker was a young man whom Armitage had never seen before. He was a decided blond, with close trimmed, straw-colored beard and slightly curling hair. Opposite him and facing the door, sat Chauvenet. On the table between them were decanters and liqueur glasses.

at the top of the house. The Serbian was evidently a man of action. "Get up," he commanded, still in rough German, and he rose in the dark and jerked Armitage after him. There was a moment of silence in which Armitage shook and stretched himself, and then the Serbian struck another match and held it close to a revolver which he held pointed at Armitage's head.

"I will shoot," he said again in his halting German.

"Undoubtedly you will," and something in the fellow's manner caused Armitage to laugh. He had been caught, and he did not at once see any safe issue out of his predicament, but his plight had its preposterous side and the ease with which he had been taken at the very outset of his quest touched his humor. Then he sobered instantly and concentrated his wits upon the immediate situation.

The Serbian backed away, with a match upheld in one hand and the leveled revolver in the other, leaving Armitage in the middle of the kitchen.

"I am going to light a lamp, and if you move I will kill you," admonished the fellow, and Armitage heard his feet scripping over the brick floor of the kitchen as he backed toward a table that stood against the wall near the outer door.

Armitage stood perfectly still. The neighborhood and the house itself were quiet. The two men in the third story room were probably engrossed with their business at which Armitage had left them, and his immediate affair was with the Serbian alone. The fellow continued to mumble his threats, but Armitage had resolved to play the part of an Englishman who understood no German, and he addressed the man sharply in English several times to signify that he did not understand.

The Serbian half turned toward his prisoner, the revolver in his left hand, while with the fingers of his right he felt laboriously for a lamp that had been revealed by the flit dashes of the matches. It is not an easy matter to light a lamp when you have only one hand to work with, particularly when you are obliged to keep an eye on a suspicious prisoner of whose character you are ignorant, and it was several minutes before the job was done.
